Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurMuch more than a travel memoir its an invitation to go and see for yourself. Whether roaming through forests of forbidden fruits or wandering in swaying fields of sunflowers, its time to head off to the next mediaeval marvel and the next four-course feast. Pedalling along curvaceous country lanes or freewheeling through valleys and vineyards earning your supper in this sleepy corner of France is nothing short of a privilege. Tony and Ludmilla have landed a job with a specialist cycling and walking holiday company in the South of France but thats not something we can hold against them for too long! They head off to the mediaeval marvel of Cordes-sur-Ciel in the Tarn a region so achingly beautiful and laden with history and mystery they have to pinch themselves to be sure such a place really does exist. When their cyclists turn up for a weeks pedal-powered adventure they will need a reliable back-up service when they puncture a tyre or come face to jowl with a devil dog intent on devouring their panniers. And when their walkers take the wrong trail and find themselves humming Bonnie Tylers 70s hit Lost in France, they too will need a timely rescue. Well, thats the theory Biographie de l'auteur Tony Lewis is the author of If Only I Could Talk - a Canine Adventure and Tales from the Hilltop - a summer in the other South of France. Tony was born the wrong side of four decades ago in the heavily accented heart of Northern England. He currently divides his time and wages between Portugal, the South of France, and a lesser-visited place called home. He enjoys cycling and walking quite often the latter when the hills are too steep.
